Shots at the Shop offers COVID-19 vaccines at the places we all go

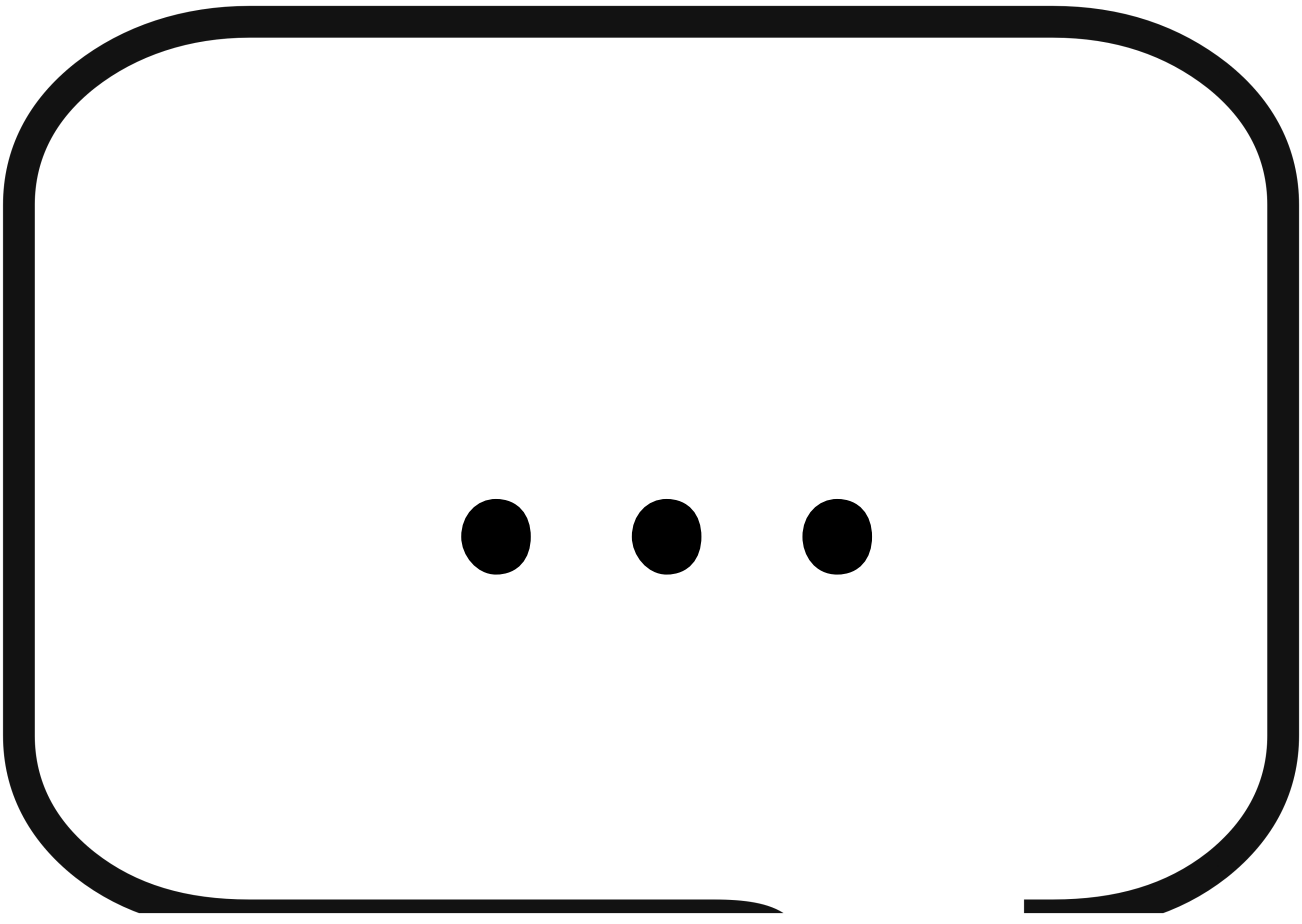
CINCINNATI (WKRC) – You can get a new look and protection against COVID-19 at a special event this weekend.

Another chance for you to get a haircut, have a conversation and get a COVID-19 vaccine is coming up on Saturday with Shots at the Shop.

Those who take part in this program are trained to help answer questions, but the health department comes to the shops and providers administer the shots. It’s part of the philosophy that bringing shots to the public might help those who have obstacles to care and are hesitant if they don’t have the right information.

"My first reaction is to tell me what your concerns are and let's see if we can get some answers for you so that at least you become more comfortable and have the right information. I don't think it helps to, as I've heard people say, 'I wish people would get vaccinated.' I don't think that's the conversation," said Renee Mahaffey Harris, president and CEO of The Health Gap.

Shots at the Shop is from noon to 4 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 18 at the Hairport Barber and Beauty Studio on Vine Street in Hartwell.



JOIN THE CONVERSATION (
0
)

To learn more about the Center for Closing the Health Gap and this event, click here.

We'd love your feedback on Immersive Reader. Did content appear properly on this webpage?